Syn. penetration, judiciousness, keenness, acumen, perspicacity, insight, acuteness, astuteness, shrewdness. These words name varying degrees of the power of mental perception. Penetration is extraordinary discernment, which enters at lightning speed into the essence of a matter, uncovering that which was concealed, observing pretexts in their true colors, unshrouding artifice. Acuteness and acumen name a still higher degree of intellectual capacity; acuteness characterizes a more general capability than penetration; acumen adds comprehensiveness and judicious discrimination to acuteness. A man of penetration sees through problems or difficulties with a glance; acuteness will enable him in addition to observe the subtleties of the situation; acumen will enable him to perceive its every angle, and to select those aspects which are most important. Perspicacity, like penetration, names that power of the mind which gets at the substance of things. Sagacity unites penetrative keenness with judicious foresight, to the end that the one possessing sagacity seems sometimes uncannily prescient. Sagacity exercises itself usually in the ordinary affairs of everyday life; it is a sensible sort of judgment, below the level of wisdom, but above that of shrewdness. Shrewdness is a sharply discriminating aptitude for practical affairs—so sharp, indeed, that it leans toward the crafty; the word connotes that kind of cleverness that can pick and keep a bargain. If we are beaten by sagacity, we are inclined to admire the technique of our defeat; if we are beaten by shrewdness, we resent the method. Astuteness is like perspicacity in that it is sharp, like sagacity in that it is foreseeing and farseeing; it uses its qualities often to the end of artfulness or craftiness, and sometimes bears the unfavorable connotation of shrewdness. Insight is discernment plus that intuition which plumbs character at a glance.

Syn., n. wage, hire, pay, compensation, remuneration, stipend, recompense, fee. Salary names the fixed periodical payment made to those who do professional or mental work; wage is applied to payment made for manual or mechanical work. A wage is also fixed and periodical, but is considered less permanent and stable, and is paid usually at shorter intervals, than salary. Pay is used frequently in the sense of wages, sometimes in the sense of salary; pay suggests definitely the actual money given for goods bought, services rendered, or debt discharged. Wage and pay are supposed to wipe out debt or obligation. Compensation is a general term which means that which is given in return; it may mean plain pay; or it may name amends, restoration for loss, indemnification for injury, etc. Hence, it may include remuneration and recompense as well as pay, hire, and salary. The basic idea of remuneration is reward; it is, however, often loftily used for salary or other pecuniary return, such as royalties. Remuneration falls short of the general sense of recompense; recompense lacks the commercial or pecuniary tone, and enters rather the field of satisfaction, requital, atonement, or retribution given. The compensation given by the government to the widows of soldiers who died in action can be termed a remuneration; there can be no fitting recompense for a life lost. Fee names the remuneration which a professional man, such as a lawyer, asks for his services; it is also applied to the money a public officer, as a notary, gets for performing his function; sometimes it is a gratuity; as, the fee given to a clergyman at a marriage. Stipend formerly applied to the regular salary of a clergyman.

It is not too much, but there is no feeling that it is inadequate or scanty. That suffices which is merely enough, barely adequate. To satiate is to fill a demand to the full, or gratify desire completely; to sate is even more emphatic; one whose greed for power is satiated, or whose appetite for vengeance or amusement is sated, is wearied of what he previously longed for. To cloy is to sicken with sameness, particularly with overabundance, sweetness, or luxury; to surfeit is to get too much, or cause to take too much, particularly of food. Both cloy and surfeit connote revulsion. To glut is to fill disgustingly full; glut expresses the extreme of satisfaction, or repletion; it sickens the offender. An ordinary meal satisfies a normal person; much less than an ordinary meal would suffice one lost in the mountains. Children released from restrictions will cloy themselves with sweets; naturally greedy persons will glut themselves with food. One sensible and sensitive will never surfeit himself with anything.—Ant. check, stint, deny, restrain, starve.

sche-mat-ic (skē-măt'ĭk), adj. [see scheme], 1, of the nature of, or pertaining to, a general plan or outline, synopsis or diagram; typical; 2, made or done according to some fundamental plan.

sche-ma-tize (skē'mȧ-tīz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -tized (-tīzd), p.pr. -tizing], 1, to formulate in regular order; arrange, as a scheme; 2, to give conventional form to:—v.i. to make a scheme.

scheme (skēm), n. [<L.L. schema<Gk. skhēma, form, figure], 1, a carefully arranged and well-ordered, systematic arrangement or plan; a system; 2, a tabulated plan or statement of plans; a schedule; 3, an underhand plot or device; 4, a project; as, the best scheme to raise money; also, 5, an outline showing the relative form, position, etc., of the different parts or elements of an object or system; a sketch; diagram:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. schemed (skēmd), p.pr. scheming], to design or plan; devise; contrive; plot: —v.i. to form plans; plot.—n. schem'er.

Syn., n. plan, project, design. Design includes not only the end to be accomplished, but a method of doing it with the means at hand. A plan is a detailed method by which a design is worked out. Both these words may name something indefinitely proposed to the mind as an aim, but scheme and projct are the words usually employed to connote the airy or the visionary. Scheme, the more indefinite of the two, is also narrower in scope; often it names an artful, underhand plan, as for getting even for an injury. A project may be tentative or visionary, or may be a concrete proposal; as, the project to build cotton mills near the cotton fields. (Cf. design.)

schol-ar (skŏl'ẽr), n. [<A.S. scolere or O.F. escoler <L.L. scholaris<Lat. schola, school], 1, a learned man or woman; a man or woman of letters; one who holds a scholarship; 2, one who attends a school or learns from a tutor or teacher; a student; anyone who learns. (For Syn. see next page.)

Syn. pupil, student. Scholar is nowadays applied chiefly to those who have perfected themselves in some branch of learning; the term implies profundity of knowledge as opposed to a casual acquaintance with a subject. The word is used frequently of those versed in the liberal arts, particularly in the languages. Scholar is still occasionally used in America to name one going to school, as in the nursery rhyme about the "ten-o'clock scholar"; but this use is old-fashioned even here. However, we speak of one apt at learning as a good scholar, or of one rather dull as a poor scholar. Pupil has supplanted scholar as the name for the schoolboy or schoolgirl, and is also used for one under the instruction of a tutor. Pupil connotes dependence on, and subordination to, the teacher. Student names one who studies independently of the close supervision or authority of a teacher; hence it, rather than pupil, is used of learners in the higher educational institutions. Student does not connote erudition as does scholar.

schol-ar-ly (skŏl'ĕr-lĭ), adj. 1, like, or characteristic of, a learned man; as, a scholarly book; 2, learned; intellectual and highly cultivated; 3, thorough and systematic in methods of study.

scold (skōld), v.i. [< M.E. scald, scolde, a person of ribald or abusive speech, prob. < O.N. skāld, a poet: cf. O.N. skāldskapr, poetry, a libel in verse], 1, to chide sharply or rudely; 2, to speak in a loud or violent manner:—v.t. to find fault with; rate; rebuke severely:—n. one who habitually finds fault; especially, a rude, quarrelsome woman; a virago.—n. scold'er.

Syn., v. reprove, rate, berate, chide, reprimand, rebuke, upbraid. To reprore is to blame for some fault or irregularity; it is sometimes tenderly or mildly reproachful; as, the mother reproved her child; but it may be stern and forceful; as, the judge reproved the attorney from the bench. Rebuke connotes more sharpness and severity than reprore; we rebuke for more serious cause, and we place the stress on the idea of blame rather than on dissatisfaction or reproach. To be rebuked cuts us; to be reproved makes us reproach ourselves. Reprimand is stronger than rebuke; to reprimand is to rebuke authoritatively. A manager reprimands, not reproves or rebukes, a subordinate who has blundered; an officer is reprimanded by his superior. Chide, though not used officially or authoritatively as is reprimand, is nevertheless a stronger word; there is sometimes faultfinding implied in it, and the sense of blame it conveys is deep. When we chide those we love, there is present a note of admonition. Scold is the most severe of all these words. It connotes noisy faultfinding, railing, and violence of tone. Rate and berate add to scold the heat of anger and, too often, unreasonableness. To upbraid is to blame severely for that which justly deserves blame, as something disgraceful or wicked; it is often reproachful; as, her father upbraided her for her disobedience.

scol-lop (skŏl'ŭp), n. [see scallop], 1, Zoöl., any of several bivalve mollusks having ribbed shells; 2, the shell of one species formerly worn as a badge by returned pilgrims from Palestine; 3, a small, shallow dish or pan, originally a large scallop shell, in which oysters, shredded or minced fish, or the like, are cooked or served; 4, one of a series of semicircular curves forming an ornamental edge, as on certain laces:—v.t. to trim, or mark the edge of, with ornamental curves, or scallops: Cookery, 1, to cook in scallop shells or dishes; 2, to prepare, as oysters, with bread crumbs, seasoning, etc., and bake. See scal'lop, Pfd. S.

sconce (skŏns), n. [< O.F. esconse, a dark lantern, hiding place < Lat. abscondere (-sconsus), to hide], 1, a protection; cover; shelter; shed or hut; 2, a cover or protection for the head; helmet; 3, an ornamental wall bracket for holding one or more candles (see illus., next page); also, a lantern, especially one with a protecting shade; 4, a circular socket, especially with a brim for a candle; 5, at Oxford

Syn. sentimentality. Sentiment, ordinarily used in a good sense, is compounded of both thought and feeling. It manifests itself as a mental view, tendency, or bias, warmed, colored, prompted by, or based on, emotion. Such a view or tendency is noble or lofty in thought, artistic, delicate, sometimes tender, in feeling. Taken as a whole such views or tendencies influence the will and govern action; as, the sentiment of patriotism; the sentiment of honor; a person's sentiments with regard to a given proposal. The susceptibility to such mental feelings is also called sentiment; as, a man of sentiment. Less often sentiment is used in an unfavorable sense, that denoting mawkishness, weepy, emotional weakness or the display of it, or the tendency to be swayed by emotion rather than thought; it is in this unfavorable sense that sentiment and sentimentality are synonyms. Sentimentality sometimes adds to mawkishness the idea of affected feeling, of artificial, almost vulgar, susceptibility to feeling; as, "he had a tonic quality of mind that always attacked sentimentality"; "she was attracted by the sentimentality of stories which described long, unhappy attachments."

Colloq.*, the ague or chill caused by intermittent fever.

Syn., v. agitate, rock, swing, oscillate, sway, vibrate, tremble, shiver, quiver, shudder, jar, rattle. To shake is to move violently up and down, back and forth, or from side to side, with rapid, short motions; that which is shaken may be a large body, as the earth shaken by a quake, or it may be a rug shaken by the hands, or a leaf shaken by a breeze. To agitate is to shake in an irregular manner. Shake and agitate are often used interchangeably, though we say that the ocean is agitated, not shaken, by the tempest, and that the kernels of corn in a popper are shaken rather than agitated. Figuratively, agitate is used of a less profound disturbance than shake; our feelings are agitated by the news of a great public disaster; we are shaken by a personal affliction. To rock is to move to and fro on a base; as, to rock a cradle; or from a deep foundation that acts as a pivot: as, the house rocked. Rocking is a slower, less jerky movement than shaking. Figuratively, to rock indicates a deep-seated upheaval of all that was firm and substantial; as, his world rocked about him. To swing is to move to and fro from a support above, as does a pendulum, or from a fixed point or points at the sides, as a door on its hinges. To oscillate is to swing like a pendulum, moving to and fro between two points. To sway is to oscillate irregularly, or to swing back and forth unsteadily, as branches in the wind. Vibrate, like oscillate, indicates the regular motion to and fro of the pendulum; vibrate is also used to express the rapid motion produced when a taut string is plucked, when a bell is struck, when a heavy footstep shakes the floor. Flames of fire dancing with a rapid, vibrating motion are said to quiver, as are leaves that move in the breeze, voices that tremble with emotion. Shiver is used of a trembling, vibrating, momentary motion such as runs over the body from cold, down the spine from horror, or from thrilling anticipation. To shudder is to experience a kind of shivering; to shudder connotes loathing or repugnance.

Syn., adj. concise, laconic, pithy, compact, condensed, terse, succinct, little, insufficient, inadequate, brief, curt. We may say a brief or a short interval, a brief or a short speech, but we say a short man, a short trip. Short can also mean abrupt, especially snappishly, or reticently so; as, he was so short with me that I asked no more questions. Brief and short in their synonymous sense commonly refer to duration, less often to manner, though sometimes brief connotes reduction or abridgment, and short suggests incompleteness. The other words refer to manner or style, to the person given to such style, or the speech or writing marked by it. Conciseness is decisive brevity; a concise speech is cut down to the pith of the matter; concise writing contains no unnecessary words, and has a brisk and bracing quality. Laconic adds to concise the tendency to use language so compressed that it is axiomatic. "Many words darken speech," a maxim taken from an old copy book, probably originated in a mind that loved laconic expression. A pithy saying is one that so presents the kernel of a matter as to give it force and effectiveness by its very compression. To be brief one needs only to compass one's subject quickly; to be concise, one has only to be sparing and precise with his words; to be laconic, one must be a niggard with words; but to be pithy requires wit and intelligence. Terse adds to pithy smoothness and finish, a polished lack of superfluity. Succinct combines the precision of concise and the elegance of terse. Curt may connote the clean brevity of concise, or it may mean short in the sense of discourteously abrupt.

short-age (shôr'tăj), n. the quantity or amount needed to make up the whole or needed amount; a deficiency; a deficit.

Syn. gaudy, gay, flashy, garish, tawdry, pretentious. Brilliantly colored flowers in a garden, the bright red of the flying cardinal, are showy in a favorable sense. That which attracts the eye or attention by a gay or apparently fine exterior, but which is really cheap, worthless, or artificial, is showy in an unfavorable sense; as, showy jewels; showy manners which do not disguise the boor. Gaudy, like showy, connotes brilliance of color, but it suggests inappropriateness and lack of taste rather than worthlessness. Gaudy clothes might be expensive, but they would be badly chosen and of striking colors. Gaudy can mean conspicuous in a bad sense; as, gaudy raiment; it is also unfavorably suggestive of the overdone, overdecorated: as, a gaudy literary style. Gay lacks the unfavorable connotation of gaudy; gay colors, though bright, are pleasing; gay clothes are well chosen as to color and appropriateness. Flashy adds to showy and gaudy the note of vulgarity; that which is flashy is cheap, shallow, and common. Garish describes the obtrusively bright; that which is garish attracts the eye by gaudiness, or dazzles it by glare and harshness. That is tawdry which is cheap, showily worthless, overornamented, flimsy, or frail in nature; as, tawdry furnishings. A pretentious style, a pretentious display, claim a merit they do not possess, or a significance not actual; a pretentious braggart is unable to sustain his boastings; a pretentious style of living is often adopted by the newly rich.

Also, scep'tic; Scep'tic.

Syn. doubter, infidel, agnostic, atheist, freethinker. A doubter is one who is inclined to disbelieve; especially, in a religious sense, a doubter is one so overwhelmed by uncertainty that he withholds assent. A skeptic is one who doubts so emphatically that he denies the truth of Christianity, of divine revelation, or of all religious doctrines. An infidel, literally one without faith, is, in general, an unbeliever. The skeptic denies; the infidel rejects and refuses. Historically, any non-Christian, particularly during the Crusades, any Mohammedan, was an infidel. Now the term, which carries opprobrium, is applied according to point of view; for instance, from a Mohammedan or Jewish point of view, a Christian is an infidel. An agnostic is one who maintains that nothing is, or can actually be, known about anything not materially real and present. The agnostic neither doubts nor denies; he merely says, "I do not know." An atheist is one who denies the existence of a God. A freethinker may be a radical or he may be one throwing off justly resented religious authority. He who calls himself a freethinker is apt to be merely rejecting what he has a right to reject; but the same name, if applied to him by the body with which he disagrees, connotes, from their viewpoint, radicalism and rebellion.

skep-ti-cal (skĕp'tĭ-kăl), adj. 1, pertaining to, or like, a doubter or skeptic; 2, doubting everything; unbelieving; incredulous; difficult to convince; 3, doubting divine revelation or other religious belief. Also, scep'ti-cal.—adv. skep'ti-cal-ly.

[1]sor-rel (sŏr′ĕl), n. [< O.F. dim. sorel(e) < M.H.G. sūr, sour], Bot., 1, any of several species of erect perennial herbs of a genus (Rumex) of the buckwheat family, having long, spear-shaped leaves, small, reddish flowers in a terminal cluster, and a sour juice: also called garden, or sheep, sorrel; 2, any of several species of delicate herbs (genus Oxalis) of the family of the wood sorrels, having trifoliate leaves, white, yellow, or violet flowers, and a sour juice: also called wood sorrel; 3, any of various other herbs.

[2]sor-rel (sŏr′ĕl), adj. [< O.F. sorel, sorrel horse, dim. of sor, reddish brown: akin to [1]sear, the color being that of dried leaves], reddish brown:—n. 1, a reddish brown color; 2, an animal, especially a horse, of this color: Archaic, a male deer in his third year.

sor-row (sŏr′ō), n. [< M.E. sorwe < A.S. sorg, sorrow], 1, mental pain or depression caused by loss, regret, disappointment, or the like; grief; distress; unhappiness; 2, anything that causes trouble or affliction; 3, the state of being sorry; contrition:—v.i. to experience mental pain; grieve; lament:—v.t. Archaic, 1, to cause grief to; 2, to grieve for.—n. sor'row-er.

Syn., v. grieve, mourn; n. compunction, regret, remorse, grief, sadness, lamentation, repentance, affliction, trial, tribulation. Sorrow is a deep and lasting sadness or mental pain felt for misfortune, sin, the loss of some one dear to us, or other serious source of distress. Regret can be as deep and moving a feeling as sorrow; as, regret over the loss of a friend. But commonly regret names a feeling of annoyance, disappointment, vexation; we feel regret over forgetting an appointment, over a social blunder, or any painful situation. Sorrow for sin is deeper than regret over sin. Compunction is slight regret, felt over a committed or a contemplated act; compunction is colored by scruple, by a tiny pricking of conscience; as, the instant I had spoken so harshly, I felt compunction in my heart. Remorse is bitter sorrow and repentance over wrongdoing; guilt weighs heavily on the remorseful, often with the sense of helplessness, of irreparableness. No matter how sorry a murderer may be, he cannot restore life to his victim; hence, in addition to sorrow, in spite of repentance, he will be eaten by remorse. (See grief.) —Ant., n. glee, mirth, happiness, rejoicing, hilarity.

sor-row-ful (sŏr′ō-fo͝ol), adj. full of, showing, or causing, sadness or grief; unhappy; grievous.—adv. sor'row-ful-ly.—n. sor'row-ful-ness.

spe-ci-al-i-ty (spĕsh"ĭ-ăl'ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, the special or distinctive mark of a person or thing; as, the speciality of an author's style; 2, an object or occupation possessing a distinctive quality that marks it off from others; as, specialities of arts and crafts.

spe-cial-ize (spĕsh'ăl-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], to apply, modify, or adapt, for a particular use: generally in the past participle; as, specialized knowledge:—v.i. to become individual in some particular way; concentrate on a particular line of action or course of study; as, to specialize in art.—n. spe'cial-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'-).

spe-cial-ty (spĕsh'ăl-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, a line of work or study to which one is particularly devoted; as, his specialty is music; 2, an article dealt in exclusively, or receiving particular attention; as, the specialty of the store was fruit; 3, an article of particular character or use; as, specialties in silver; 4, a mark or feature of particular or individual character in a person or thing; 5, state or quality of being individual: Law, a contract or deed under seal.

spe-cie (spē'shĭ), n. [<Lat. (in) specie, (in) kind <species, kind], coin; gold or silver money, as opposed to paper money.

spe-cies (spē'shēz; spē'shĭ-ēz), n. sing. and pl. [Lat. = appearance, kind <specere, to look at], a kind; sort; variety: Biol., a group of animals or plants, usually constituting a subdivision next smaller than a genus, having certain common characteristics which clearly distinguish it from other groups and which are ordinarily inherited; Logic, a group of objects agreeing in common characteristics and called by a common name: Archaic, general form or appearance; an image presented to the mind; Obs., coin; specie.

spe-cif-ic (spē-sĭf'ĭk), adj. [<L.L. specificus<Lat. species, species], 1, of or pertaining to a species, or group, of which the members have common characteristics and are called by a common name; 2, definite or particular; precise; as, specific information: Med., 1, designating a definitely distinguishable disease; 2, exercising a definite effect on a disease or condition: used of a drug or treatment; 3, causing a definite disease; as, the Klebs-Löffler bacillus is the specific germ of diphtheria: specific duty, a tax on goods, especially on imports, at a fixed amount per yard, per pound, or the like, and not, like an ad-valorem duty, based on their price: specific gravity, Phys., the relative weight of a given volume of any kind of matter as compared with the weight of an equal volume of a standard substance, as water or air: specific heat, Phys., the amount of heat required to raise the temperature of a unit mass of a substance one degree, as compared with the amount required to raise the same amount of water one degree:—n. anything specially suited to a particular use or purpose: Med., a remedy for a particular disease.—adj. spe-cif'i-cal.—adv. spe-cif'i-cal-ly.

spec-i-fi-ca-tion (spĕs"ĭ-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. [see specify], 1, the act of particularizing, or naming in detail; 2, a definite and full statement of particulars; as, the specification of a charge against an officer; 3, one detail in such a statement: pl. a detailed statement of requirements for carrying out a contract, as for a building.

spec-i-fy (spĕs'ĭ-fī), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [<O.F. specifier<L.L. specificare (-atus), to describe<Lat. species, kind+facere, to make], 1, to mention or name particularly; state in full, so as to distinguish from other things; as, to specify the uses of a plant; to specify the contents of a trunk; 2, to include in a detailed statement.

spec-i-men (spĕs'ĭ-mĕn), n. [Lat. = characteristic mark<specere, to look at], 1, a sample; a part which shows the quality and character of the whole; as, a specimen of ore; 2, one of several things, which typifies all; as, an insect specimen: Colloq., a person who typifies some ridiculous or humorous quality.

Syn. example, instance, sample, pattern, model, illustration. An example is illustrative; a specimen is representative; an instance is demonstrative. Example is general; it can be used for either specimen or instance. An example of a man's workmanship illustrates the type of work he ordinarily does; the Scriptures afford many examples of conduct; history furnishes examples which should instruct the present. A specimen is an example that represents a class or whole; as, a specimen of copper ore; a splendid specimen of manhood, generosity, the fighting spirit. We speak of an example or specimen of workmanship, skill, or type; but of a specimen of ore, an example of conduct, a specimen of the oriole, an example of a man's duplicity. An instance is an example that serves to confirm or prove a certain point. It applies only to actions or proof, and not, as does example, to the moral or intellectual field as well. We may cite Lincoln as an example to be followed; we may prove his good qualities by giving instances of his loyalty, his truthfulness, or his charity.

spe-ci-os-i-ty (spē"shĭ-ŏs'ĭ-tĭ), n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], [see specious], 1, the state of being apparently right or plausible; 2, a thing that appears right or plausible at first sight, but is not.

spe-cious (spē'shŭs), adj. [<Lat. speciosus, fair, fair-seeming<species, appearance, kind], appearing right or plausible at first sight, but not really so; apparently, but not actually, fair or just; as, a specious argument: Obs., fair or showy; beautiful.—adv. spe'cious-ly.—n. spe'cious-ness.

Syn. ostensible, apparent. (See plausible.)

speck (spĕk), n. [<A.S. specca, speck], 1, a spot; flaw; blemish, as a spot of decay on fruit; 2, a very small thing; mite; particle:—v.t. to spot, or stain with small spots; speckle.

speck-le (spĕk'l), n. [dim. of speck: cf. M.Du. speckel, speckle], a small spot in or on anything, different in substance or color from the thing itself:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. speckled (-ld), p.pr. speckling], to mark with spots of a color different from that of the thing itself.

specs (spĕks), n.pl. [abbr. of spectacles], Colloq., spectacles.

spec-ta-cle (spĕk'tȧ-kl), n. [Fr.<Lat. spectaculum, a show<spectare, to look at, observe], 1, something displayed to view, especially something unusual or worthy of notice; 2, a pageant or parade; a grand exhibition; 3, an unpleasant or painful sight; especially, a deplorable public display; 4, pl. a device for assisting or correcting defective vision, consisting of two lenses mounted in a frame, with a bridge to fit over the nose and bows to pass over the ears; 5, sing. or pl. spectaclelike markings, as around the eyes of some animals.

Syn. pageant, exhibition, display, parade, show.

spec-ta-cled (spĕk'tə-kld), adj. 1, wearing spectacles; 2, marked, as an animal, in such a way as to suggest spectacles.

spec-tac-u-lar (spĕk-tăk'ū-lər), adj. 1, pertaining to a show or exhibition; 2, marked by grand display; designed to excite wonder by scenic or dramatic effect; imposing.—adv. spec-tac'u-lar-ly.—n. spec-tac'u-lar'i-ty.

spec-ta-tor (spĕk-tā'tĕr), n. [Lat. < spectare (-atus), to look at, observe], one who looks on, especially at a public exhibition; an observer; witness.—n.fem. spec-ta'tress; spec-ta'trix.

spec-ter (spĕk'tĕr), n. [< Fr. spectre, specter < Lat. spectrum, image < specere, to look at], a ghost or apparition. Also, spec'tre.

Syn. phantom, spirit, shade, ghost, apparition.

spec-tra (spĕk'trə), n. plural of spectrum, which see.

spec-tral (spĕk'trăl), adj. [see specter], pertaining to, or like, a ghost; ghostly: Phys., 1, pertaining to a spectrum; 2, pertaining to the decomposition of light into its constituent colors; as, spectral analysis; 3, composed of a single color of the spectrum, unmixed with white light.—n. spec-tral'i-ty (-trăl'ĭ-tĭ).—adv. spec'tral-ly.

spec-trom-e-ter (spĕk-trŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [< Lat. spectrum, image + Gk. metron, a measure], an instrument for measuring the wave lengths of radiant energy by means of its spectrum, and for measuring the optical properties of substances.

spec-tro-scope (spĕk'trō-skōp), n. [< Lat. spectrum, image + Gk. skopein, to look], Phys., an optical instrument for decomposing a beam of light or radiant energy into its constituents, and examining the image so formed.—adj. spec'tro-scop'ic (-skŏp'ĭk); spec'tro-scop'i-cal.—adv. spec'tro-scop'i-cal-ly.

spec-tros-co-py (spĕk-trŏs'kō-pĭ; spĕk'trō-skŏ'pĭ), n. the science of the phenomena observed by the spectroscope; also, the science of using such an instrument.—n. spec-tros'co-pist.

spec-trum (spĕk'trŭm), n. [pl. spectra (-trə)], [Lat. = image < specere, to look at], Phys., 1, a colored image in which the constituents of a beam of light or other radiant energy are separated and spread out according to their wave lengths, as by an optical device such as a prism (see prism, refraction, illus.); 2, the image of an object still seen after the eye is closed or turned aside: spectrum analysis, spectroscopy; the decomposition of a beam of light into its constituents, and examination of the image so formed: also called spectral analysis.

spec-u-lar (spĕk'ū-lər), adj. [see speculum], of or pertaining to a mirror or reflector; specifically, capable of reflecting.

spec-u-late (spĕk'ū-lāt), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -lated, p.pr. -lating], [< Lat. speculari (-atus), to spy out, examine < specula, a lookout, watchtower < specere, to see, look at], to consider a subject in all its aspects; meditate upon a topic and form opinions upon it: Com., to buy and sell stock, land, goods, or the like, with the expectation of being able to make a profit by change in market prices.—n. spec'u-la'tor (-lā"tĕr).

Syn. invest, gamble. To speculate is to lay out money in such a way as to assume an economic risk that would exist normally, whereas to gamble is to attempt to gain from buying and selling accompanied by wholly unnecessary risks. On the other hand, to invest is to lay out money for profit or income without any risk (except a business failure). Money placed in a savings bank or in bonds is an investment. The buying of stocks, except perhaps preferred, is generally considered speculation; the selling of shorts is a gamble.

spec-u-la-tion (spĕk'ū-lā'shŭn), n. mental examination or theorizing; reflective, inquiring consideration: Com., the buying and selling of stocks, goods, etc., with the expectation of profiting by a change in market prices; participation in the activities of stock and grain exchanges: Archaic, intuition.

spec-u-la-tive (spĕk'ū-lā-tĭv), adj. pertaining to contemplation, reflection, or theorizing: Com., pertaining to speculation (see speculate, speculation), especially to speculation in ventures in which hope of high profits offsets a high degree of risk of loss: Archaic, peeping; prying; inquisitive.—adv. spec'u-la-tive-ly.—n. spec'u-la-tive-ness.

spec-u-la-to-ry (spĕk'ū-lə-tō-rĭ), adj. inclined to meditate, or occupied in meditating, upon a subject: Com., pertaining to buying at a risk, with the idea of selling at a higher price: Archaic, suitable for, or adapted to, observing.

spec-u-lum (spĕk'ū-lŭm), n. [pl. -la (-lə); -lums (-lŭmz)], [Lat. = mirror < specere, to look at], a reflector of polished metal, especially one used in an optical instrument: Surg., a surgical instrument used to examine certain passages or cavities of the body by expanding them and opening them to view; Ornith., a spot of color on the wing of some birds, often iridescent, as on the wing of the mallard duck: speculum metal, a hard, white, brittle alloy of two parts copper to one of tin, formerly used for mirrors of reflecting telescopes, but now replaced by silvered glass.

speech (spēch), n. [< A.S. sprǣc, spǣc, speech < sprecan, to speak], 1, the power to utter articulate sounds or intelligible words; 2, expression of thought in words; act of speaking; 3, manner of speaking; as, his speech is indistinct; 4, that which is spoken; conversation; 5, a language or dialect; as, Italian is a musical speech; 6, a formal discourse in public, or the published report of it; an oration; as, to make a speech: Obs., gossip; report; talk.

Syn. address, harangue, oration, discourse, disquisition, sermon. These words agree in expressing the idea of utterance. Speech is the general term for the public utterance of thoughts or sentiments. One may make a formal or an informal speech; an address is generally set and formal, and carries a grave and dignified connotation. The Gettysburg Address exemplifies this usage; we speak of an after-dinner speech. An oration is formal, elaborate, and not infrequently solemn, since it is delivered, often, on the occasion of some ceremony. The style of an oration is polished; an oration is always carefully prepared. The orations of Cicero have been admired for centuries in their written form. A harangue is a noisy, passionate, unrestrained appeal, often polemical and disputatious as well as overardent; as, the speech proved to be a harangue on government ownership. Discourse names a set speech; a discourse is usually full and adequate, and on a definite subject; sometimes it is a treatise intended to give instruction. A disquisition is a particularly elaborate discourse; it is long, detailed, systematic; often it becomes the statement of an inquiry or investigation. A sermon is a discourse usually delivered by a clergyman. Any discourse or informal talk which is morally uplifting can properly be called a sermon. (See language.)

speech-i-fy (spēch'ĭ-fī), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. -fied (-fīd), p.pr. -fying], [speech + -fy], Humorous, to make a speech.—n. speech'i-fi"er.

speech-less (spēch'lĕs), adj. [see speech], 1, being without the power to speak; 2, dumb; silent; 3, not expressed in words: as, a speechless entreaty.—adv. speech'less-ly.—n. speech'less-ness.

Syn. dumb, silent, mute, inarticulate, still.

speed (spēd), n. [< A.S. spēd, success], 1, the act or state of moving rapidly; swiftness; quickness; 2, rate of motion or progress; velocity: Archaic, good fortune; good luck; success; prosperity; as, he wished her all speed; Obs., one who promotes success: —v.i. [p.t. and p.p. sped (spĕd) or speeded, p.pr. speeding], Obs., to make haste; hurry; make progress; get on: fare; Archaic, to be in any state of fortune, good or bad:—v.t. 1, to prosper; help; favor; 2, to send away with good wishes: as, to speed the parting guest; 3, to cause to move fast or faster; as, to speed an engine: Archaic, to drive or urge to ruin; kill.

spher-i-cal (sfĕr'I-kăl), adj. like, or pertaining to, a sphere, or globe: Math., having the form of, or bounded by, the surface of a sphere: spherical aberration, Phys., a defect in a lens or mirror, such that rays from the outer portions are not brought to the same focus as the central rays: spherical excess, Trig., the excess of the sum of the angles of a spherical triangle over 180°: spherical triangle, Trig., a figure formed on the surface of a sphere by the intersecting arcs of three great circles. Also, spher'ic.—adv. spher'i-cal-ly.

sphe-ric-i-ty (sfē-rĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. the state or fact of being a sphere, or globe; roundness.

spher-ics (sfĕr'ĭks), n. pl. used as sing. Math., the geometry of figures lying on the surface of a sphere; specifically, spherical trigonometry.

sphe-roid (sfē'roid), n. [<Gk. sphaira, ball +eidos, shape], a body that is nearly a sphere in shape; as, the earth is an oblate spheroid: Geom., a solid or surface generated by the revolution of an ellipse about either its major axis (prolate spheroid) or its minor axis (oblate spheroid).—adj. sphe-roi'dal.

sphe-rom-e-ter (sfē-rŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [<Gk. sphaira, ball +metron, a measure], Phys., a device for determining the curvature of the surface of spheres, cylinders, or the like, or for measuring the thickness of small objects.

spher-ule (sfĕr'ōōl), n. [<Lat. sphaerula, dim. of sphaera<Gk. sphaira, sphere], a little sphere; a globule.—adj. spher'u-lar (sfĕr'ōō-lăr).

spher-y (sfĕr'ĭ), adj. [see sphere], Poet., 1, of or pertaining to a sphere or to the heavenly spheres; 2, round; starlike.

sphinc-ter (sfĭngk'tĕr), n. [<Gk. sphigktēr, band, contractile muscle<sphiggein, to bind tight], Anat., a ringlike muscle that surrounds a natural opening in the body, contracting to close it and expanding to open it.—adj. sphinc'ter-al.

sphinx (sfĭngks), n. [pl. sphinxes (sfĭngk'sĕz); sphinges (sfĭn'jēz)], [<Gk. Sphigx, Sphinx, perh.<sphiggein, to bind tight], 1, in Greek myth, a monster having the body of a winged lion and a woman's head and breasts; in Egyptian art, a creature represented as having a lion's body with a hawk's, ram's, or man's head; 2, a reticent person; a person with an inscrutable character: Entom., a hawk moth: also called sphinx moth: Sphinx, 1, Gk. Myth., a monster at Thebes, Greece, who slew passers-by when they were unable to solve a riddle which she propounded to them; 2, Egypt. Antiq., the colossal statue at Giza, near Cairo, the face of which is supposed to be a likeness of the god Harmachis (see illus. next column).

sphra-gis-tics (sfrā-jĭs'tĭks), n.pl. used as sing. [<Gk. sphragistikos<sphragis, seal], the study and classification of engraved seals.

sphyg-mic (sfĭg'mĭk), adj. [<Gk. sphygmikos<sphygmos, pulse<sphuzein, to beat], Physiol., pertaining to, or characteristic of, a pulse.

sphyg-mo-graph (sfĭg'mō-grăf), n. [<Gk. sphygmos, pulse+graphein, to write], Physiol., an instrument that registers graphically the character of the pulse beat.—adj. sphyg'mo-graph'ic.—n. sphyg-mog'ra-phy (-mŏg'rā-fĭ).

sphyg-mo-ma-nom-e-ter (sfĭg'mō-mā-nŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [sphygmo- (<Gk. sphygmos, pulse) +manometer], an instrument for measuring the blood pressure.

Spi-ca (spī'kā), n. [<Lat. spica, ear of grain], Astron., the brightest star in the constellation Virgo (see constellation, chart).

spi-cate (spī'kāt), adj. [<Lat. spicare (-atus), to furnish with spikes; point], Bot., having spikes, or being arranged in the form of a spike; Zoöl., spurlike. Also, spi'cat-ed (spī'kāt-ĕd).

spic-ca-to (spĭk-kā'tō), adj. [It.=detached], Mus., detached; separated: in violin music, played, or to be played, with a loose wrist so that the bow rebounds slightly from the string between successive notes: used in rapid passages.

spice (spīs), n. [<O.F. espice, spice<Lat. species, species, kind], 1, any of various aromatic vegetable substances, sometimes ground or powdered to be used for seasoning, as cinnamon, nutmeg, pepper; 2, a relish; that which gives flavor or zest; smack; dash; as, a spice of mischief; 3, an aromatic fragrance: —v.t. [p.t. and p.p. spiced (spīst), p.pr. spicing], to season or flavor, with, or as with, condiments.—n. spic'er.

SPHINXES

1, crouching sphinx (Egyptian); 2, sitting sphinx (Greek); 3, crouching sphinx (modern); 4, crouching sphinx (Egyptian); 5, the Sphinx at Giza.

spice-bush (spīs'bŏŏsh"), n. [spice+bush], an American shrub (Benzoin æstivale) of the laurel family, bearing small, clustered, yellow flowers, and red drupes: also called spicewood, wild allspice, and feverbush.

spic-er-y (spīs'ĕr-ĭ), n. [pl. -eries (-ĭz)], [see spice], 1, spices collectively; 2, that which is spicelike or which has the characteristics of a spice: Obs., a place where spices are kept or sold.

spick-and-span (spĭk"ănd-spăn'), adj. new and clean; fresh; without blemish: also written spick-and-span-new.

spic-u-late (spĭk'ū-lāt), adj. [<Lat. spiculare (-atus), to point], having, covered with, or divided into, slender, sharp points, or spikelets.

spic-ule (spĭk'ūl), n. [<L.L. spicula, dim. of Lat. spica, a sharp point, spike], 1, a little spike; a delicate, sharp-pointed, hard body; 2, Zoöl., any of several very small calcareous or siliceous structures, either simple, like a sharp spike, or complex, armed with many spikelike points, which form the skeletons of most sponges.—adj. spic'u-lar (-lăr).

spic-y (spīs'ĭ), adj. [comp. -ier, superl. -iest], [see spice], 1, flavored with, containing, or having the qualities of, spice; fragrant; aromatic; 2, full of life and point; keen; racy; also, somewhat risqué; 3, producing, or abounding in, spices: Slang, smart in appearance; showy.—adv. spic'i-ly.—n. spic'i-ness.

Syn. stimulating, lively, pungent. (See piquant.)

spi-der (spī'dĕr), n. [<M.E. spither, prob.<A.S. spinnan, to spin], 1, any of various arachnids capable of spinning silken fibers with which some varieties construct webs for catching prey (see Arachnida, illus.); 2, anything suggestive of a spider in form, especially in having long, slender legs; 3, a kind of frying pan: originally one with long legs to hold it over the logs in a fireplace: Mech., any of various parts having radiating members, as the hub and spokes of a wheel.

spi-der-wort (spī'dĕr-wûrt"), n. [spider+wort], any of a family (Commelinaceæ) of plants bearing blue or violet flowers with slender, hairy stamens; especially, any plant of a certain genus (Tradescantia) of this family.

spied (spīd), past tense and past participle of the verb spy, which see.

spie-gel-ei-sen (spē'gĕl-ī"zĕn; shpē'-), n. [Ger. spiegel, mirror + eisen, iron], Metal., a pig iron containing 10 to 30 per cent of manganese, which is extensively used in the manufacture of steel: also called spiegel iron; spiegel.

spig-ot (spĭg'ŭt), n. [prob. < Prov'l espiga, spike < Lat. spica, plant spike, ear of grain], 1, a peg or pointed piece of wood used to stop the opening or bunghole in a cask; 2, the plug in a faucet or cock; sometimes, the faucet or cock itself.

[1]spike (spīk), n. [source uncertain: cf. Sw. and Norw. spik, nail], 1, a sharp point or projection; 2, any sharp, slender object, as a kind of large nail: —v.t. [p.t. and p.p. spiked (spīkt), p.pr. spiking], 1, to fasten or equip with large nails or sharp points; 2, to run through with a sharp point: Mil., to disable (a cannon), as by plugging its vent with a spike.—adj. spik'y.

[2]spike (spīk), n. [< Lat. spica, plant spike], an ear of grain: Bot., a mode of inflorescence, or arrangement of flowers on a stalk, in which the flowers are attached directly, without stems, along the end of the stalk, as in the plantain (see inflorescence, illus.).

spike lav-en-der Bot., a species of mint resembling the true lavender, and yielding an oil used by artists.

spike-let (spīk'lĕt), n. [dim. of [2]spike], Bot., a very small or secondary spike, as the flower cluster of certain grasses.

spike-nard (spīk'närd), n. [< L.L. spica nardi, a transl. of Gk. nardou stakhus, spike of nard], 1, a precious oil or ointment used by the ancients; 2, an aromatic herb (Nardostachys jatamansi) of the East Indies, supposedly yielding this oil; 3, any of various fragrant oils: Bot., a plant (Aralia racemosa) of the ginseng family, having large, spicy, aromatic roots.

spile (spīl), n. [prob. < [2]pile by influence of dial. spile, splinter], 1, a large timber driven into the ground as a foundation; a pile; 2, a wooden plug or spigot; 3, in the United States, a spout driven into a hole bored in a tree, as a sugar maple, to drain off the sap:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. spiled (spīld), p.pr. spiling], 1, to drive piles into; 2, to put supporting timbers under; 3, to provide with a spigot.—n. spil'ing.

spil-i-kin (spĭl'ĭ-kĭn), n. [< O.Du. spelleken, a small pin], a light strip or peg of wood, ivory, bone, or other material, used in playing certain games, as jackstraws, or in keeping score, as in cribbage: pl. a game played with such pieces. Also, spil'li-kin.

[1]spill (spĭl), n. [< A.S. spell, a splinter; torch < O.Teut. source: cf. O.H.G. spaltan, to split], 1, a slender piece of anything, as a splinter, wooden pin, metal rod, or the like; 2, a thin strip of wood or small roll of paper for lighting a lamp, etc.

[2]spill (spĭl), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. spilled (spĭld) or spilt (spĭlt), p.pr. spilling], [< A.S. spillan, to destroy, spoil], 1, to cause or permit to run over, or fall out of, a vessel or other container: used generally of liquids, powder, sand, or the like; 2, to cause to be scattered, wasted, lost, or the like; cause to pour forth wantonly; as, to spill blood: Naut., to permit wind to escape from, in order to reef or furl, as a sail: Colloq., to throw or overthrow, as a rider from his horse:—v.i. to flow over, fall out, be scattered, or the like:—n. the act or state of overflowing, scattering, falling out, or running over; the overflow of a dam: Colloq., 1, a throw or tumble, as from a bicycle; 2, a heavy shower.

spilth (spĭlth), n. [see [2]spill], Archaic, that which is spilled; hence, waste or lavishness.

spin (spĭn), v.t. [p.t. spun (spŭn), or, Archaic, span (spăn), p.p. spun, p.pr. spinning], [< A.S. spinnan, to spin < O.Teut. source], 1, to draw out and twist (various fibers) into threads; as, to spin cotton; 2, to make by drawing out and twisting various fibers; as, to spin thread or wool; 3, to form (a web or cocoon) by drawing out threads of fluid from a gland: said of spiders, silkworms, and the like; 4, to draw out tediously; relate at tiresome length: often with out; as, to spin out a story; 5, to cause to whirl rapidly, as a top; turn around: Mech., to form (a disk of sheet metal) into a hollow shape in or on a lathe:—v.i. 1, to draw out and twist fiber into threads; 2, to expel threads of fluid and form a web or cocoon with them: said of a spider, silkworm, or the like; 3, to whirl; twirl; turn around quickly and rapidly: Colloq., to move swiftly and easily; as, to spin along the road in a motor car:—n. the act of spinning; especially, a rapid whirling: Colloq., 1, a rapid and easy movement, especially on wheels; 2, a short drive, as in an automobile.

spin-ach (spĭn'ăj; spĭn'ĕch), n. [< O.F. espinage (espinache), spinach: source uncertain], a common garden herb of the goosefoot family, the leaves of which are boiled and eaten as a vegetable. Also, spin'age.—adj. spi-na'ceous.

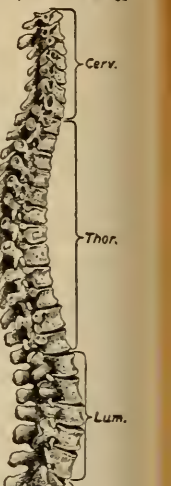
spi-nal (spī'năl), adj. [see spine], pertaining to a spine, or pointed, stiff growth on a plant or animal: Anat., 1, pertaining to the backbone; as, spinal disease; 2, pertaining to a spine, or thornlike, spinous process: spinal column, the backbone, a series of similar bones joined by cartilage, extending from the base of the skull to the pelvis, and affording a strong, flexible support for the body: spinal cord, a large cord of nervous tissue running lengthwise through the spinal column.



SPINAL COLUMN showing the groups of vertebræ: Cerv., cervical; Thor., thoracic; Lum., lumbar; Sac., sacral; Coc., coccygeal.

spin-dle (spĭn'dl), n. [< A.S. spinel, spindle < spinnan, to spin], 1, in spinning on a wheel or a machine, the long, thin rod used for twisting and holding the spun thread; in spinning by hand, a round stick, tapering at each end, on which the thread is twisted and held (see spinning wheel, illus.); 2, an axle or shaft: a slender rod or pin on which a part turns, or which revolves, as in various machines; 3, anything very slender and thin; a slender person; 4, a measure for yarn:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. spindled (-dld), p.pr. spindling], to grow or become disproportionately long and slim.

spin-dle-leg-ged (spĭn'dl-lĕg"ĕd; -ld; -lĕgd"), adj. having long, slender legs; as, a spindle-legged table.

spin-dle-shanks (spĭn'dl-shăngks"), n. pl. [spindle + shank], long, thin legs: pl. used as sing. a tall person with long, thin legs.—adj. spin'dle-shanked" (-shăngkt").

spin-dling (spĭn'dlĭng), adj. [see spindle], long and thin; especially, too thin in proportion to height:—n. a tall, slender person or thing.

spin-drift (spĭn'drĭft), n. [var. of spoondrift, q.v.], foam or spray blown up from the surface of a stormy sea: also called spoondrift.

spine (spīn), n. [< Lat. spina, thorn; backbone], Bot., a stiff, thorn-shaped or pointed growth on a plant: Zoöl., any similar growth on an animal, as on a fish: Anat., 1, the backbone; the spinal column; 2, a slender process of bone, as the dorsal process on a vertebra.—adj. spi'nous.

spin-el (spĭn'ĕl; spĭ-nĕl'), n. [< O.F. espinelle, spine < Lat. spina, thorn: in allusion to pointed shape of crystals], Mineral., one of a group of variously colored crystalline minerals composed of oxides of magnesium, aluminum, iron, etc., valuable as ores: spinel ruby, a deep-red variety of spinel, inferior in value to the true ruby, but valued as a gem.

spine-less (spīn'lĕs), adj. [see spine], 1, having no backbone; invertebrate; 2, without courage; without the will to resist; weak; as, a spineless simpleton; 3, without spines or pointed outgrowths; as, the spineless cactus.

spi-nes-cent (spī-nĕs'-ĕnt), adj. [< Lat. spinescens (-entis), becoming thorny], Bot., becoming spiny; spinous; Zoöl., tending toward a spinous condition.—n. spi-nes'cence.

spin-et (spĭn'ĕt; spĭ-nĕt'), n. [< O.F. espinette, spinet, prob. named for the inventor, Giovanni Spinetti of Venice], Mus., an obsolete stringed and keyed instrument like the harpsichord, but smaller: an early form of piano.

spin-i-fex (spĭn'ĭ-fĕks), n. [L.L. < Lat. spina, spine + facere, to make], Bot., any of a genus (Spinifex) of spiny grasses, mostly found in Australia: used for fodder and as sand binders.

spin-na-ker (spĭn'ə-kĕr), n. [prob. < spinx, a mispronunciation of Sphinx, the name of the first yacht which used this sail], Naut., a large sail, triangular in shape, used chiefly by a racing vessel running before the wind.

spin-ner (spĭn'ĕr), n. [see spin], one who or that which spins; specifically, in fishing, any of various attachments to a hook, that twirl and so attract the attention of the fish: Aëro., a conical cap over the hub of the propeller of an airplane (see airplane, illus.); Zoöl., a spider.

spin-ner-et (spĭn'ĕr-ĕt), n. [dim. of spinner < spin, q.v.], Zoöl., the organ that spins silk, as in silkworms or spiders.

spin-ney (spĭn'ĭ), n. [pl. -neys (-nĭz)], [< O.F. espinei, espinoi, a place full of brambles < Lat. spina, spine], in England, a thicket; a small wood or clump of trees. Also, spin'ny.

spin-ning jen-ny a machine having several spindles, so that a number of threads can be spun at a time: invented by James Hargreaves, an Englishman, in 1767.

spin-ning wheel a machine with a spindle which is turned by a large wheel operated by hand or foot power, on which fibers, as cotton, wool, or the like, are twisted into thread or yarn: no longer used commercially.

SPINNING BY HAND AND ON SPINNING WHEEL

1, hand spinning with distaff and spindle: a, distaff, holding flax, wool, or cotton to be twisted into thread; b, rove, or fibers as they come from distaff, which are drawn out or attenuated as they are twisted; c, spindle: first twirled by fingers and allowed to hang, thus drawing and twisting thread; then used as a spool to wind up twisted thread.—2, details of spindle: a, whorl, or weighted disk, used to steady the twisting motion; b, spun thread already wound; c, half hitch to keep thread from unwinding while next rove is being twisted.—3, flax spinning wheel as developed in Saxony about 1530: a, treadle; b, distaff; c, rove; d, large wheel, which is connected by a double cord or belt with the spindle and flyer, e; f, handle regulating tension of cords.—4, details of spindle and flyer: ab, eye, or hole in axle, through which rove comes from operator's hands; c, flyer, which is turned by cord running over wharve, or pulley, d; e, bobbin, or reel, which, when d is unscrewed, slips into place on axle, h, or spindle, and turns loosely on it; f, hooks for distributing twisted thread on bobbin; g, wharve for turning bobbin. Rove is drawn from distaff, and attenuated by hand. As flyer is turned by cord, rove is twisted and then wound on bobbin, which, having smaller wharve, turns faster if operator does not hold it back by tautness of yarn.

spi-nous (spī'nŭs), adj. [see spine], 1, full of, or covered with, sharp, pointed thorns or quills, as the porcupine; thorny: also, spinose (spī'nōs; spī-nōs'): 2, like a spine; as, a spinous process of bone. —n. spi-nos'i-ty (spī-nŏs'ĭ-tĭ).

spin-ster (spĭn'stĕr), n. [fem. of spinner < spin, q.v.], 1, a woman who spins; 2, an unmarried woman; also, in popular use, an elderly, unmarried woman; formerly, a title bestowed on unmarried women from the daughter of a viscount down.

spi-nule (spī'nūl; spĭn'ūl), n. [< Lat. spinula, dim. of spina, spine], a small spine.—adj. spin'u-lose (spĭn'ū-lōs; spī'nū-lōs).—adj. spin'u-les'cent (spĭn'ū-lĕs'ĕnt).

spin-y (spĭn'ĭ), adj. [comp. -ier, superl. -iest], [see spine], 1, full of, or covered with, thorny prongs or points; prickly; thorny; 2, full of difficulty or perplexity; troublesome: Obs., slim; slender.—n. spin'i-ness.

spin-y ant-eat-er the echidna, an egg-laying mammal of Australia, having a wormlike tongue, a prolonged snout, and strong spines mingled with the hair of the skin: an anteater resembling a porcupine (for illus. see echidna).

spir-a-cle (spīr'ə-kl; spī'rə-kl), n. [< Lat. spiraculum < spirare, to breathe], Zoöl., one of the small openings through which many aquatic mammals, including whales, porpoises, etc., breathe; in insects, any of the exterior openings of the tracheæ, or air tubes of the body: Obs., an aperture.

spi-ræ-a (spī-rē'ə), n. [< Gk. speiraia, spiræa, prob. < speira, coil], Bot., any of a genus (Spiræa) of shrubs of the rose family, cultivated or wild, bearing small white or pink flowers. Also, spi-re'a.

spi-ral (spī'rəl), n. [see spire], 1, Geom., a plane curve traced by a point moving around a fixed point from which it continually recedes (as in a watch spring); also, a similar curve traced by a point moving around an axis, and continually receding from a plane cutting the axis (as in the thread on a bolt or a wood screw): 2, anything shaped like, or resembling, either of these curves:—adj. pertaining to, or shaped like, a spiral: spiral nebula, any of a vast number of luminous masses in the form of great spirals, located at enormous distances from the earth, each of which is now regarded as probably constituting a universe similar in scope to that constituting our solar system and visible stars.—adv. spi'ral-ly.

1, parabolic spiral; 2, helix or cylindrical spiral; 3, conical spiral.

spi-rant (spī'rănt), n. [< Lat. spirans (-antis), breathing], Phon., a consonant produced by the forced passage of the breath through a narrow opening; a fricative or continuant consonant sound, as f, s, sh, v (see phonetic alphabet, App. I).

¹spire (spīr), n. [< Lat. spira < Gk. speira, coil, twist], a spiral, or single turn of a spiral: specifically, the upper part of a spiral shell, including all the whorls except that forming the main body.—adj. spired (spīrd).

²spire (spīr), n. [< A.S. spīr, a stalk or stem of a plant], 1, a slender leaf or blade, as of grass 2, a body that tapers to a point; especially, a slender, tapering top of a tower or steeple; also, a steeple; 3, highest point; pinnacle:—v.i. [p.t. and p.p. spired (spīrd), p.pr. spiring], to shoot forth, or point up, in or as in, a spire:—v.t. to supply with a tapering top.

Spi-rif-er-a (spī-rĭf'ĕr-ə), n. [Mod. Lat. < Lat. spira, a coil + ferre, to bear], Paleontology, a genus of fossil brachiopods, characterized by highly developed spiral appendages: abundant in the Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous formations.

spi-ril-lum (spī-rĭl'ŭm), n. [pl. -la (-lə)], [L.L., dim. of Lat. spira, coil], Bacteriol., any of a genus (Spirillum) of bacteria, spirally curved; also, a filiform, or thread-shaped, bacterium (see bacteria, illus.).

spir-it (spĭr'ĭt), n. [< Lat. spiritus, breath, spirit < spirare, to breathe], 1, life; the principle of life regarded as a mysterious entity separable from the body; 2, the soul; the immortal, nonphysical part of man; 3, a supernatural being, as a ghost or fairy; 4, a person, considered with reference to qualities of mind or temper; as, a noble spirit; 5, temper; mood; disposition; humor: usually pl.; also, lively or courageous mood; courage, energy, or liveliness; as, the troops advanced with spirit; 6, power of mind, moral or intellectual; as, "the spirit is willing"; 7, condition of mind, temper, or disposition; as, the spirit of the army was loyal; 8, enthusiasm for an object; as, school spirit; 9, real meaning; intent; as, the tone of the words contradicted their spirit; 10, any distilled alcoholic liquor used as a beverage or otherwise, as brandy, whisky, or gin: usually pl.: Pharm. an alcoholic solution of some medicinal principle; especially, an alcoholic solution of a volatile substance; as, spirit of camphor: distinguished from tincture: often pl.: Obs., air; breath; hence, life: Spirit, the third person of the Trinity; the Holy Spirit:—v.t. 1, to carry suddenly or secretly, as if supernaturally: often with off or away; 2, to encourage; cheer; animate: often with up.

spir-it-ed (spĭr'ĭt-ĕd), adj. 1, full of vigor or life; animated; lively; as, a spirited horse; a spirited answer; 2, showing disposition of a certain kind: in composition; as, a mean-spirited fellow; a low-spirited mood: Obs., possessed by an evil spirit.—adv. spir'it-ed-ly.—n. spir'it-ed-ness.

Syn. bold, ardent, fiery, vivacious, mettlesome.—Ant. lifeless, dull, unanimated, dead, heavy.

spir-it-ing (spĭr'ĭt-ĭng), n. lively movement or action, as of a spirit; hence, a thing done quickly and well, as if by a spirit.

spir-it-ism (spĭr'ĭ-tĭzm), n. the belief that the souls of the dead communicate with the living, either directly or through mediums; spiritualism.—n. spir'it-ist.—adj. spir"it-is'tic (-tĭs'tĭk).

spir-it-less (spĭr'ĭt-lĕs), adj. 1, listless; dejected; inactive; without vigor, vivacity, or animation; as, a spiritless address, or speaker; 2, dead; without life.—adv. spir'it-less-ly.

Syn. torpid, vapid, lifeless, heavy, dull.

spir-it lev-el Mech., an instrument for adjusting something to the true horizontal, or for determining a horizontal plane, by the position of a bubble in a glass tube of alcohol or other liquid.

SPIRIT LEVEL

spir-it rap-ping rapping or tapping often heard in séances with a spiritualistic medium.

spir-its of harts-horn Chem., a solution of ammonia in water, for household use, as in cleaning; commonly called ammonia.

spir-it-u-al (spĭr'ĭt-ū-ăl), adj. [<O.F. spirituel <Lat. spiritualis <spiritus, spirit: see spirit], 1, not material; of or pertaining to the mind or soul, as distinguished from matter: opposite of physical; 2, pertaining to the soul or higher nature of man; 3, pure; holy; divine; proceeding from heaven; 4, pertaining to sacred or religious things; not lay or temporal; ecclesiastical:—n. Mus., a hymn or sacred song, especially one native to the negro race.—adv. spir'it-u-al-ly.—n. spir'it-u-al-ness.

sub-stan-ti-ate (sŭb-stăn'shĭ-āt), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ated, p.pr. -ating], 1, to establish by evidence or proof; verify; as, to substantiate a claim or a statement; 2, to give concrete form to; embody; put into substance; as, to substantiate one's thoughts in writing.—n. sub-stan"ti-a'tion.

Syn. confirm, establish, ratify, sustain, settle, fix. To substantiate is to prove the truth of a charge, assertion, claim, or the like, by producing evidence, good grounds, or some such body of facts to back it. To establish is also to prove absolutely; that which is established as a fact, is beyond dispute. Solidity is the thought back of substantiate; foundation lies back of establish. To confirm is to establish that which was doubtful, as a rumor, that which was trembling in the balance, as power, that which needed authority, as an agent's right to do business for some one else, that which was uncertain, as the time of a meeting. To sustain is to uphold, as a decision by a higher court; to tend to prove or bear out; as, the witnesses who followed him sustained his testimony. To ratify is formally to confirm; we ratify certain agreements by signature; nations ratify treaties. To settle an argument or question is to arrive at a conclusion that is final.

sub-stan-ti-val (sŭb"stăn-tī'văl; sŭb'stăn-tīv-ăl), adj. [see substantive], independent; self-dependent: Gram., pertaining to, or like, a substantive, or noun.—adv. sub"stan-ti'val-ly.

sub-stan-tive (sŭb'stăn-tĭv), adj. [< Lat. substantivus, self-existent < sub, under + stare, to stand], 1, independent; existing independently and separately; self-sufficient; having its own individuality; as, France is a substantive state; 2, essential; as, India is a substantive part of the British Empire; 3, real; permanent; substantial; of considerable amount: Gram., 1, expressing existence; as, "to be" is the substantive verb; 2, of the nature of, or used as, a noun; as, a substantive clause:—n. Gram., a noun, or group of words used as a noun.

sub-stan-tive-ly (sŭb'stăn-tĭv-lĭ), adv. in substance; essentially; as, this report is poorly written but is substantively correct: Gram., as a substantive, or noun.

sub-tend (sŭb-tĕnd'), v.t. [< Lat. sub, under + tendere, to stretch], Geom., to lie opposite to; as, the chord that subtends an arc; Bot., to fold or inclose in its axil; as, a leaf subtends a bud.

sub-ter-fuge (sŭb'tĕr-fūj), n. [< Lat. subter, under + fugere, to flee], anything, as a trick, pretext, or evasion, by which one seeks to escape from a difficulty; a false excuse.

Syn. artifice, cunning, finesse, maneuver, trick, ruse, stratagem. Artifice is cleverly planned indirection. It wriggles out of a difficult situation by using some crafty device; it screens its real purpose while apparently effecting something else; it secures an advantage or benefit by artful contriving. It is ready and skilful; as, she used every artifice in her power to keep the officer from the room where the prisoner lay hidden; she averted questions by artifice. The other words are kinds of artifice. A subterfuge is a dodge to avoid blame or get out of something through a false excuse; subterfuge employs evasion; as, his excuses for not going were transparent subterfuges; he justified everything from politics to lapses from duty by miserable subterfuges. A trick is a fraudulent measure or device, sometimes elaborately planned, to deceive or get the better of somebody. Trick has the connotation of underhandedness, of not being aboveboard, and of being actually harmful; "a dirty trick" is a common expression. A maneuver is like artifice in that it is carefully planned, but it accomplishes its purpose by false or deceiving movements, elusiveness, or sidestepping; as, by adroit maneurers he succeeded in circumventing his enemies. Stratagem is artifice deeply laid, minutely worked out, and usually directed toward some considerable end; as, "fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils." A ruse is a feint to draw away attention from what one is really going to do; it uses the false movement of maneuver with the purpose of trick; as, he was inveigled into betraying his secret by a clever ruse. Finesse is adroit manipulation, usually subtle, exercised on that which is critical, ticklish, or requires careful handling. Diplomats sometimes need to use finesse. Cunning, which is either the quality or the act of artfulness, is a craftiness that ensnares, a williness that entraps; as, he flattered him, with low cunning, until the trap was sprung. Sometimes these words are used innocently, playfully, or in a good sense; as, a childish trick; a stratagem by which a surprise is effected in war; an artifice by which an invalid is enticed to follow advice; a finesse at cards; the maneurers of an army or navy at war; the ruse by which a lunatic is persuaded to return to his cell.

sub-ter-ra-ne-an (sŭb"tĕr-ā'nē-ăn), adj. [< Lat. subterraneus, under the earth < sub, under + terra, earth], 1, underground; below the surface of the earth; as, a subterranean cave; hence, 2, hidden; secret. Also, sub"ter-ra'ne-ous.

sub-tile (sŭb'tĭl; sŭt'l), adj. [< Fr. subtil < O.F. sautil < Lat. subtilis, fine-woven < sub, under + tela, a web], Rare or Archaic, subtle.—adv. sub'tile-ly.—n. sub'tile-ness.

sub-til-ize (sŭb'tĭl-īz; sŭt'l-īz), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. -ized (-īzd), p.pr. -izing], 1, to elevate; refine; etherealize; 2, to reduce to nice distinctions; spin out finely, as an argument:—v.i. to elaborate, or make nice distinctions, as in an argument.

sub-ti-tle (sŭb"tī'tl), n. [sub- + title], a secondary, usually explanatory, title; sometimes, a main title repeated in a secondary place.

sub-tle (sŭt'l), adj. [comp. -tler, superl. -tlest], [< O.F. sautil: see subtile], 1, thin; finely or delicately formed; fine, as a spider's web; 2, delicate; refined: also, penetrating, as a perfume; 3, sly; cunning; artful; crafty; 4, clever; ingeniously devised or wrought; 5, acute; discerning; sagacious; 6, skilful; clever or handy; 7, intricate; abstruse; evasive; hard to understand or follow, as charm or reasoning.—adv. sub'tly (sŭt'lĭ).—n. sub'tle-ty.—n. sub'tle-ness.

Syn. delicate, elusive, penetrating, crafty. (See wily.)

sub-ton-ic (sŭb-tŏn'ĭk), adj. [sub- + tone], Phon., voiced, but not having pure vowel quality, as the consonants b, d, m, n;—n. Phon., a subtonic sound; Mus., the seventh degree of an ascending diatonic scale: also called leading tone.

sub-tract (sŭb-trăkt'), v.t. [< Lat. sub, under + trahere (tractus), to draw], to withdraw; take away; specifically, in mathematics, to take away, as a part from the whole.—n. sub-tract'er.

sub-trac-tion (sŭb-trăk'shŭn), n. the act or process of taking away, as a part from a whole; specifically, in mathematics, the operation or the act of finding how much one number exceeds another number; the process of finding a number (the difference) which, added to a given number (the subtrahend), will produce another number (the minuend).

sub-trac-tive (sŭb-trăk'tĭv), adj. involving subtraction or deduction: Math., having the minus sign [−].

sub-tra-hend (sŭb'trə-hĕnd'), n. [< Lat. sub, under + trahendus, to be drawn], Math., the number subtracted from the minuend.

sub-treas-ur-y (sŭb-trĕzh'ûr-ĭ), n. [pl. -uries (-ĭz)], [sub- + treasury], formerly, any of the branches of the United States Treasury situated in certain cities for the receipt and payment of government funds, which functions in 1920–21 were transferred to the Federal Reserve Banks; a subordinate treasury.—n. sub'treas'ur-er.

sub-trop-i-cal (sŭb-trŏp'ĭ-kăl), adj. [sub- + tropical], of or pertaining to the regions bordering the tropical zone; as, subtropical plants. Also, sub-trop'ic.—n.pl. sub-trop'ics.

sub-urb (sŭb'ûrb), n. [< Lat. sub, under + urbs (urbis), city], a town or district adjacent to a larger town, of which it may or may not be a political part: pl. outskirts of a city or a large town.

sub-ur-ban (sŭb-ûr'băn), adj. pertaining to, in, or living within, the outlying districts of a city or town; as, suburban residents:—n. one who lives in a suburb: also called suburbanite.

sym-met-al-ism (sĭm″mĕt′ăl-ĭzm), n. [syn- + metal], a monetary system in which the unit is the value of a specified weight of each of two metals, as silver and gold, or more, combined: distinguished from bimetalism.

sym-met-ri-cal (sĭ-mĕt′rĭ-kăl), adj. [see symmetry], 1, having a harmonious relation or a right proportion between parts; regular; well-balanced; 2, having similar form on each side of a central line or plane: Bot., of a flower, having sepals, petals, stamens, and pistils, or their parts, alike in number or in multiples of the same number; Math., having corresponding parts; as, of a plane figure, so shaped and situated with regard to a line, the axis of symmetry, that every point in the boundary of the figure corresponds in every respect to another point in the boundary on the other side of the line.

sym-met-ri-cal e-qua-tion Math., an equation in x and y such that, if x is substituted for y and y for x, the resulting equation is identical with the first.

sym-me-try (sĭm′ĕ-trĭ), n. [pl. -tries (-trĭz)], [< Lat. < Gk. summetria < sun, together + metron, a measure], 1, a due proportion between the parts of a whole; balance; harmony; 2, repetition of exactly similar parts on opposite sides of an axis, center, or plane.

sym-pa-thet-ic (sĭm″pă-thĕt′ĭk), adj. [see sympathy], 1, sharing, or affected by, the feelings of another; possessing a fellow feeling; as, a sympathetic friend; 2, hence, compassionate; 3, congenial; harmonious: sympathetic ink, an ink that remains invisible on the paper until treated with some agent, as heat, strong light, acid, etc.: also called invisible ink: sympathetic system, Anat. and Zoöl., that part of the cerebrospinal nervous system carrying chiefly efferent impulses from the brain and spinal cord to the organs not under voluntary control, as the viscera, glands, blood vessels, and involuntary muscles of other parts of the body: consisting of a double chain of ganglia extending from the head to the pelvis, many widely distributed small ganglia, and the large plexuses of the body cavity, all connected by nerves with the brain or spinal cord.—adj. sym″pa-thet′i-cal (-pă-thĕt-ĭ′-kăl).—adv. sym″pa-thet′i-cal-ly.

Syn. kindred, harmonious; human, tender, kindly.

sym-pa-thy (sĭm′pă-thĭ), n. [pl. -thies (-thĭz)], [< Lat. < Gk. sumpatheia < sun, with + pathos, feeling < paskhein, to suffer], 1, the feeling of being harmoniously affected by the emotional state of another, or of sharing another's emotions: with with; as, I feel sympathy with your anger; 2, a feeling of compassion for another's troubles: with for; 3, a mutual understanding, or agreement of tastes or inclinations, causing persons to be congenial; also, any harmony or agreement: Phys., a relation between two bodies or systems such that the vibrations of one cause a corresponding vibration in the other; Med., 1, the mutual influence exercised by parts or organs upon one another; 2, the influence of a certain mental state in one person in causing a like state in another.

Syn. pity, commiseration, condolence, compassion, tenderness, kindness, pathos. Sympathy is the tendency to share, or the state of sharing, the feelings of another; often, it is a mental sharing of another's trouble. Sympathy may also flow out for the aims, joy, or success of another; pity, commiseration, and compassion flow out only to those who are suffering. Pity desires to relieve and help those in trouble, but sometimes it is tinged with contempt because, perhaps unconsciously, it regards its object as weak or inferior. Pity is therefore sometimes coldly received, but sympathy is appreciated always. Compassion is a combination of sorrow and tenderness; it is gentle and merciful toward the grief-stricken and the burdened. Commiseration, like compassion, is excited by grievous misfortunes, is deeply sympathetic and desirous to help; but commiseration is often felt for those in some way beyond help. The good Samaritan had compassion for the man who had fallen among thieves; we feel commiseration for the family of a man condemned to the electric chair. Condolence is expressed sympathy, often formal, and most frequently elicited by a grave or terrible happening.—Ant. ruthlessness, inhumanity, indifference, antipathy.

sym-pet-al-ous (sĭm-pĕt′ăl-ŭs), adj. [syn- + petal], Bot., having the petals joined at the edges, as in the morning-glory and phlox; gamopetalous (for illus. see gamopetalous).

ther-mi-on (thûr'mī''ŏn), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+ion], Phys., a positively or negatively charged particle or ion emitted by a body heated to a state of incandescence.

ther-mi-on-ic (thûr''mī-ŏn'ĭk), adj. pertaining to a thermion: thermionic tube, Elec., an electron tube; a vacuum tube (which see for illus.): also called thermionic valve.

ther-mit (thûr'mĭt), n. [trade name < Gk. thermē, heat], a mixture of aluminum powder with certain metallic oxides: used, by ignition, in welding: thermit process, a process used in fusing and welding metals, as steel rails, by igniting a mixture of aluminum powder and metallic oxides, the reaction producing a very high temperature. Also, ther'mite (-mīt).

ther-mo-cau-ter-y (thûr''mō-kô'tẽr-ĭ), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+cautery], Surg., cautery, or the searing of flesh, by heat rather than by chemical means.

ther-mo-chem-is-try (thûr''mō-kĕm'ĭs-trĭ), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+chemistry], chemistry which treats of the relations between heat and chemical action.—n. ther''mo-chem'ist.—adj. ther''mo-chem'ic; ther''mo-chem'i-cal.

ther-mo-cou-ple (thûr'mō-kŭp''l), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+couple], Elec., a joined pair of wires or bars of dissimilar metals forming part of a closed circuit, which, when heated at the junction, produce an electric current, by measurement of which the temperature at the junction is determined: used to measure high temperature: also called thermoelectric couple; thermoelement.

ther-mo-dy-nam-ics (thûr''mō-dī-năm'ĭks; -dĭ-), n.pl. used as sing. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+dynamic], Phys., the science of the relations between heat and mechanical action.—adj. ther''mo-dy-nam'ic.

ther-mo-e-lec-tric-i-ty (thûr''mō-ē-lĕk-trĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+electricity], Phys., electricity produced by the action of heat.—adj. ther''mo-e-lec'tric; ther''mo-e-lec'tri-cal.—adv. ther''mo-e-lec'tri-cal-ly.

ther-mo-gen-e-sis (thûr''mō-jĕn'ē-sĭs), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+genesis], Physiol., the production of heat, especially by natural physiological processes, within the human body.—adj. ther''mo-gen'ic; ther''mo-ge-net'ic.—adj. ther-mog'e-nous (thûr-mŏj'ē-nŭs).

ther-mo-graph (thûr'mō-grăf'), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+graphein, to write], a thermometer with a device for recording automatically the successive temperatures in a given period.

ther-mol-y-sis (thẽr-mŏl'ĭ-sĭs), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+lusis, a loosing < luein, to loose], Chem., the dissociation of a compound by the application of heat: Physiol., the loss of heat from an animal body by radiation, evaporation, etc.

ther-mom-e-ter (thẽr-mŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+metron, a measure], an instrument for measuring temperature changes, usually consisting of a glass tube of capillary bore partly filled with mercury or colored alcohol, the degree of the expansion or contraction of which, due to heat changes, is read on a graduated scale; also, any of several other devices by which temperature is measured: Fahrenheit thermometer, one in which the freezing point of water is 32 degrees and the boiling point 212 degrees: centigrade thermometer, one in which the corresponding points are 0 and 100 degrees: Réaumur thermometer, one in which the corresponding points are 0 and 80 degrees.—adj. ther''mo-met'ric; ther''mo-met'ri-cal.

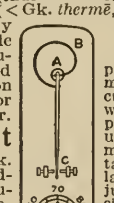
THERMOMETERS
1, house; 2, bath; 3, air; 4, maximum and minimum; 5, horticultural, for soil.

ther-mo-pile (thûr'mō-pīl), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+pile], Phys., an instrument consisting of several thermocouples so arranged as to give, when heated, a multiplied thermoelectric current: often used for detecting very slight variations in temperature.

ther-mos bot-tle (thûr'mŏs), [< Gk. thermos, hot], a bottle for maintaining the original temperature of its contents, made according to the insulating principle of a vacuum: a trade name.

ther-mo-scope (thûr'mō-skōp), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+skopos, a watcher], Phys., an instrument for demonstrating variation in temperature without showing the exact amount.

ther-mo-si-phon (thûr''mō-sī'fŏn), n. [thermo- (< Gk. thermē, heat)+siphon], a device, used especially for cooling automobile engines, in which the circulation of the cooling liquid is maintained by convection through a tubular radiator cooled by a current of air.



THERMOSTAT
Contact arm, AC, pivoted at A, is moved by B, a curved rod which, with changes of temperature, curls or uncurls slightly and makes electrical contact at C. Regulating knob, D, adjusts pointer to desired temperature on scale E and sets C in desired position.

ther-mo-stat (thûr'mō-stăt), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+statos, standing], an apparatus for automatically regulating temperature: based upon the principle that changes in temperature cause the expansion and contraction of certain substances.

ther-mo-tax-is (thûr''mō-tăk'sĭs), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat+taxis, an arranging], Physiol., the regulation of the temperature of the body; ther-mot-ic (thĕr-mŏt'ĭk), adj. [< Gk. thermōtikos, warming < thermē, heat], pertaining to, produced by, or dependent on, heat: thermotics, n.pl. used as sing. the science of heat.

Biol., movement caused in a living body by heat.—adj. ther"mo-tax'ic.

ther-mot-ro-pism (thĕr-mŏt'rō-pĭzm), n. [< Gk. thermē, heat + trepein, to turn], Bot., the property of certain plants and animals of turning toward, or away from, a source of heat. —adj. ther"mo-trop'ic.

Ther-si-tes (thĕr-sī'tēz), n. [< Gk. Thersitēs], a vilely abusive Greek soldier, the one ludicrous character in Homer's "Iliad": in later literature, slain by Achilles, whom he derided for grieving for Penthesilea, a queen of the Amazons.

the-sau-rus (thē-sô'rŭs), n. [pl. thesauri (-rī)], [Lat. < Gk. thēsauros, storehouse, treasure, treasury], 1, Gk. Antiq., a storehouse or place where treasure is kept; hence, 2, a storehouse of words or knowledge; a lexicon or encyclopedia.

these (thēz), adj. and pron. [< A.S. thās, var. of thās, pl. of thes, this], plural of the demonstrative pronoun and adjective this, which see: opposite of those: used with or without a noun; as, these books are mine; these are yours, but those are mine.

The-seus (thē'sūs; thē'sē-ŭs), n. [< Gk. Thēseus], Gk. Myth., leading legendary hero of Attica, famed for a great number of exploits, such as slaying the Minotaur in Crete and carrying off Ariadne, the daughter of the king of Crete, conquering the Amazons and marrying their queen, taking part in the Argonautic expedition, etc.

the-sis (thē'sĭs), n. [pl. -ses (-sēz)], [Gk. = a putting, placing < tithenai, to place], 1, something laid down or stated; a proposition; specifically, 2, a proposition advanced by a person who undertakes to maintain it in argument; as, Luther defended his ninety-five theses; 3, a formal, comprehensive, written treatise describing original work in research on some subject, and presented by a candidate for an academic degree: Logic, a statement not proved, but assumed as a premise; a postulate; Mus., 1, the first of the two balanced phrases in a period; the antecedent: opposite of antithesis; 2, the accented part of the measure, marked by the downward beat: opposite of arsis; Pros., the accented part of a foot; also, less properly, the unaccented part: opposite of arsis.

Thes-pi-an (thĕs'pĭ-ăn), adj. [< Gk. Thespis], 1, pertaining to Thespis, of the sixth century B. C., reputed to be the founder of Greek tragedy; hence, 2, of or pertaining to the drama; dramatic:—n. Colloq., an actor or actress.

Thes-sa-li-an (thĕ-sā'lĭ-ăn), adj. [< Lat. < Gk. Thessalia, Thessaly], pertaining to Thessaly, a district of Greece:—n. 1, an inhabitant of Thessaly; 2, the language, Æolic Greek, spoken there.

Thes-sa-lo-ni-ans (thĕs"ă-lō'nĭ-ănz), n. pl. [< place name], Bib., either of two books of the New Testament, consisting of letters written by the apostle Paul to the church at Thessalonica (see Bible, Note).—abbr. Thess.

the-ta (thē'tă; thā'tă), n. [Gk.], the eighth letter of the Greek alphabet [θ, Θ (see App. I)], approximately equivalent to the English th.

The-tis (thē'tĭs), n. [Gk.], a Nereid, wife of Peleus, who, by dipping her son Achilles in the Styx, made him completely invulnerable, except for the heel by which she held him.

the-ur-gy (thē'ûr-jĭ), n. [< Gk. theourgia, miracle, sorcery < theos, god + ergon, work], 1, a work of God, or the gods; a miracle performed by the help of God; 2, the art or science of magic or working miracles, especially supernatural magic, as practiced by means of prayers, talismans, etc., as opposed to natural magic, which was supposed to utilize secret natural forces: Philos., the science of magic as developed by the Neoplatonists, at Alexandria, supposedly enabling man to influence the gods.—adj. the-ur'gic (thē-ûr'jĭk); the-ur'gi-cal.—adv. the-ur'gi-cal-ly.

thew (thū), n. [< A.S. thēaw, habit, custom], a muscle; sinew; hence, pl. muscular power or strength; also, Obs., mental strength.

they (thā), personal pron. [< M.E. thei < O.N. their, they, which replaced A.S. hīe, they], 1, the nominative plural of the pronouns he, she, or it; 2, people in geueral; men; as, they say.

Thi-bet-an (tĭ-bĕt'ăn), adj. [see Tibetan], of or pertaining to Thibet, a country of central Asia, or its inhabitants:—n. 1, a member of the native race of this country; 2, the language spoken by its people. See Ti-bet'an, Pfd. S.

thick (thĭk), adj. [< A.S. thicce, thick < O.Teut. source], 1, measuring in the third dimension, length and breadth being the other two; also, measuring a considerable distance in depth or extent between two opposite surfaces; as, a thick board; 2, relatively deep or extensive from one surface to its opposite: opposite of thin or slender; as, a thick stem; 3, of compact or dense texture, consistency, or the like; as, thick glue; 4, close together; abundant; as, the weeds are thick in the garden; also, densely set or occupied; as, a garden thick with weeds; 5, occurring at short intervals; frequent; 6, stupid; dull; as, a thick mind; 7, not clear; muddy, foggy, or roiled; as, the air was thick with smoke; 8, muffled; indistinct, as the voice; 9, dull, as sounds: opposite of thin or clear: Colloq., extremely friendly or intimate; as, she's too thick with her new neighbors:—adv. close together; following closely or quickly; frequent; as, the blows came thick and fast: —n. 1, the thickest part of anything; as, the thick of the thumb; 2, the most intense moment; the place where action is liveliest; as, the thick of the combat: through thick and thin, under all sorts of conditions; resolutely; in spite of all difficulties; unwaveringly: —v.t. and v.i. Rare, to thicken.—adv. thick'ly.—n. thick'ness.—adj. thick'ish.

thick-en (thĭk'n), v.t. 1, to make less thin or slender; 2, to make of stiffer consistency; as, to thicken gravy with flour; 3, to set more closely together; reduce intervals or distances between:—v.i. 1, to become more dense or close together, as trees; 2, to become dark or obscure; as, night thickens; also, to become more intricate; as, the plot thickens; 3, to lose thinness or slenderness.—n. thick'en-er.

thick-en-ing (thĭk'n-ĭng), n. 1, the act of making or becoming thick; 2, a substance, as flour paste, added to a liquid mass to make it more dense; 3, a thickened place or part.

thick-et (thĭk'ĕt), n. [< A.S. thiccet, thicket, dim. of thicce, thick], a dense growth of tangled underbrush, shrubbery, trees, or the like; a copse.

thick-head (thĭk'hĕd"), n. [thick + head], a dolt; a stupid person; one slow to understand.

thick-set (thĭk'sĕt"), adj. [thick + set], 1, planted or set closely; as, thickset shrubbery; 2, having a short, stout body; as, a thickset man:—n. 1, a dense undergrowth of trees and bushes; a thicket; 2, a close-growing hedge; 3, a coarse, twilled cotton stuff with a nap like that of velveteen.

thick-skinned (thĭk'-skĭnd"), adj. 1, having thick skin; pachydermatous, as the elephant; hence, 2, not sensitive; callous; not affected by insult, reproach, criticism, or the like.

thief (thēf), n. [pl. thieves (thēvz)], [< A.S. thēof, thief < O.Teut. source], one who steals, especially furtively; formerly, an open or violent robber: Obs. or Rare, one who does evil; a rascal.

thieve (thēv), v.t. [p.t. and p.p. thieved (thēvd), p.pr. thieving], to steal:—v.i. to practice theft.

thiev-er-y (thēv'ẽr-ĭ), n. [pl. -ies (-ĭz)], the act or practice of stealing or thieving; theft.

thiev-ish (thēv'ĭsh), aaj. 1, given to stealing; 2, of, pertaining to, or like, a thief; stealthy; furtive.—adv. thiev'ish-ly.—n. thiev'ish-ness.

thigh (thī), n. [< A.S. thēoh, thigh < O.Teut. source], Anat., the part of the leg between the trunk and the knee: thigh bone, Anat., the femur.

thig-mo-tax-is (thĭg"mō-tăk'sĭs), n. [< Gk. thigma, touch + taxis, arrangement], Biol., the reaction of organisms to a surface: positive, if they attach themselves to, or remain in contact with, negative, if they turn away from, the surface.—adj. thig"mo-tac'tic (-tăk'tĭk).

thill (thĭl), n. [perh. < A.S. thille, a thin slip of wood], either of the two shafts between which the horse is harnessed.

thim-ble (thĭm'bl), n. [< A.S. thȳmel, thimble < thūma, thumb], a cap with pitted surface, worn on the end of the finger to afford protection while sewing; also, any of various things shaped like a thimble: Naut., a metal ring with a groove in the outer side, for insertion in a loop or eye-splice of a rope, to take the wear (see rigger screw, illus.); Mech., a slender tube which joins the ends of pipes, covers axles, lines a hole, etc.

thim-ble-ber-ry (thĭm'bl-bĕr"ĭ), n. [pl. -berries (-ĭz)], [thimble + berry], Bot., any of several species of American raspberry (especially, Rubus occidentalis and Rubus parviflorus) having fruit shaped like a thimble.

thim-ble-rig (thĭm'bl-rĭg"), n. [thimble + ?rig], a gambler's sleight-of-hand trick in which a small ball or pea is deftly manipulated under three thimble-shaped cups, the spectators betting on its location: also known as the shell game:—v.t. 1, to swindle by means of this trick; hence, 2, to cheat by any kind of trick.—n. thim'ble-rig"ger.

thin (thĭn), adj. [comp. thinner, superl. thinnest], [<A.S. thynne, thin<Aryan source], 1, small in diameter; fine; slim; slender; as, a thin wire or stem; 2, of a solid body of three dimensions, measuring little in the third dimension; as, thin paper; having little extent between two opposite, and more or less flat, surfaces; of little thickness; as, a thin board; 3, having the particles or component parts sparse, loose, or separated; transparent; sheer; as, thin muslin; 4, figuratively, easily seen through; slight; shallow; as, his excuses are too thin; 5, lacking density; rarefied; as, thin air; 6, lacking fulness or volume; high-pitched; shrill; faint; as, a thin voice; 7, lacking roundness or plumpness of figure; gaunt; 8, inadequate; scanty; lacking substance or vigor; as, thin blood; thin humor: Phon., clear, as sound: opposite of thick; Photog., lacking detail and contrast, as a negative or print:—v.t. [p.t. and p.p. thinned (thĭnd), p.pr. thinning], 1, to make thin or less dense; 2, to reduce in numbers:—v.i. to become less dense or numerous; as, the forest thins daily.—adv. thin'ly.—n. thin'ness.

Syn., adj. slim, fine, slight, bony; shrill. (See lean.)

thine (thīn), poss. pron. [<A.S. thīn, thine<O.Teut. source], Archaic or Poet. (except in the speech of Friends), a person or thing belonging to thee; as, a joy to thee and thine; thou hast my view, give me thine: —poss. adj. belonging to thee: used in the predicate; as, whose hat is this? it is thine: used attributively before an initial vowel or h; as, thine own self.

[1]thing (thĭng), n. [A.S.<O.Teut. source], 1, that which is, or may be made, an object of thought; that which has an individual, physical existence; any concrete entity which may be perceived through the senses, as a house, mountain, etc.; 2, that which exists as an abstract conception, or ideal, or in the imagination, as virtue, a fairy, etc.; 3, any object or existence not known or specifically designated; a something; 4, an episode or event; a particular fact, course, or affair; as, this thing must not occur again; 5, a person or animal: often a term of pity, sympathy, affection, or contempt; as, he, poor thing: Rare, bit; degree; whit: usually compounded, with an adverbial force, with any, no, or some; as, she was some*thing* better today: pl. wraps; personal possessions, as property or baggage: Law, that which may be possessed or owned; real and personal property, as distinguished from person: thing-in-itself [transl. of Ger. ding an sich], Philos., in the Kantian system, the final or essential reality of a thing, behind its appearance; the ultimate ground or cause of a physical phenomenon, which must be assumed by the mind to exist, but which can never be known; a noumenon.

[2]thing (tĭng), n. [O.N.], a Scandinavian legislative or judicial body: often in compounds; as, the Stor*thing*. Also, ting (tĭng).

[1]think (thĭngk), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. thought (thôt), p.pr. thinking], [<A.S. thenc(e)an, to think <O.Teut. source], 1, to exercise the mind with ideas, conceptions, inferences, judgments, etc., as distinguished from mere sense perceptions; 2, to meditate; muse; ponder; as, I am thinking of my boyhood; 3, to bring something before the mind: often with of; as, I can think of no alternative; 4, to have an opinion or judgment; as, he thinks well of you; 5, to purpose, plan, or intend; as, I had not thought of going until tomorrow:—v.t. 1, to occupy the mind with; imagine; conceive; as, think nothing evil of her; 2, to review or examine mentally; as, I thought the matter over; 3, to hold as an opinion; believe; as, you may think what you please; 4, to bring by thinking into some condition; as, to think oneself into a rage.—adj. think'a-ble.

Syn. conceive, meditate, believe, cogitate, muse.

[2]think (thĭngk), v.i. [p.t. and p.p. thought (thôt), p.pr. thinking], [<A.S. thyncan, to seem], to seem; appear: an impersonal verb, rare except in methinks, methought (it seems, seemed, to me).

think-er (thĭngk'ẽr), n. [see [1]think], 1, one who uses his mind in the exercise of judgment, inference, etc.; 2, a philosopher.

think-ing (thĭngk'ĭng), p.adj. having the power of thought; as, man is a thinking animal: —n. 1, the process of mental action; 2, that which is thought; as, such thinking was not considered orthodox.

thin-skinned (thĭn'skĭnd"), adj. 1, having a thin skin; hence, 2, figuratively, sensitive; easily hurt, as by criticism, insult, etc.

thi-o-sul-phate (thī"ō-sŭl'fāt), n. [<thio- (<Gk. theion, sulphur)+sulphate], Chem., a salt of thiosulphuric acid; especially, sodium thiosulphate, used by photographers and dyers, and commonly called hypo and sodium hyposulphite.

thi-o-sul-phu-ric ac-id an acid, differing from sulphuric in that the oxygen of one hydroxyl group is replaced by sulphur, unknown in the free state but forming salts called thiosulphates: formerly called hyposulphuric acid.

third (thûrd), adj. [<A.S. thridda, third<Aryan source], 1, next in order after the second: the ordinal of three; 2, designating one of the three equal parts of anything; as, a foot is a third part of a yard: Third day, Tuesday: so called by the Friends, or Quakers: third degree, in Freemasonry, the impressive ceremony by which the degree of Master Mason is conferred; hence, Colloq., the grilling examination of a prisoner by the police, calculated to obtain information or force a confession: third estate, Pol. Sci., the third political class in a state, usually the common people, the other two usually being the nobles and the clergy; a social or political class or rank distinguished by their duties and privileges from others in the same locality or nation: third person, Gram., 1, the person or thing spoken of; 2, the special grammatical form indicating such a person or thing: third rail, Elec., a rail running parallel to the two rails of an electric railway, carrying the electric current which is utilized as motive power by the cars:—n. 1, the quotient of one divided by three; 2, one of the three equal parts of anything; 3, the sixtieth part of a second of time or of angular measurement: Mus., 1, the interval between any tone in the diatonic scale and the tone next but one above it (see interval, illus.); 2, the second number of a common chord or triad: Colloq., in England and the United States, the third part of the personal estate of a husband who has died intestate leaving a child, which part, under common law and the modern statutes of most states, goes to his widow; loosely, a widow's dower: often pl.—adv. third'ly.

thirl-age (thûr'lāj), n. [var. of obs. Sc. thrillage <thrill<A.S. thræl, thrall], a kind of servitude under early English and Scottish law, obliging tenants of certain lands to have their grain ground at a particular mill and to pay the customary dues.

thirst (thûrst), n. [<A.S. thurst, thirst], 1, the desire for drink; a parched sensation in the mouth and throat; 2, a decided craving, as for liquor; hence, 3, any great longing or desire; as, a thirst for knowledge: —v.i. 1, to have a feeling of dryness in the throat and mouth from want of drink; 2, to feel a desire or craving, as for liquor; hence, 3, figuratively, to be eager; feel a craving: usually with for; as, to thirst for revenge.

Syn., n. appetite, craving, lust, relish.—Ant., n. indifference, antipathy, repulsion.

thirst-y (thûrs'tĭ), adj. [comp. -ier, superl. -iest], 1, feeling a desire for drink; 2, eager; desirous; as, thirsty for news; 3, lacking moisture; parched; dry.—adv. thirst'i-ly.—n. thirst'i-ness.

thir-teen (thûr'tēn", thûr"tēn'), adj. [<A.S. thrēo, three+tīene, tēne, pl. of tēn, ten], consisting of ten plus three:—n. 1, a cardinal number, the sum of ten and three; 2, thirteen objects or units; 3, a symbol for thirteen, as 13.—adj. and n. thir'teenth".

thir-ty (thûr'tĭ), adj. [<A.S. thrī, three+-tig, tens], consisting of three times ten:—n. [pl. -ties (-tĭz)], 1, a cardinal number, the sum of three tens; 2, thirty objects or units; 3, a symbol for thirty units, as 30 or xxx: Thirty Tyrants, in ancient Greek history, a group of thirty persons who, with the support of Sparta, governed Athens despotically for a brief period following the Peloponnesian War, 431–404 B. C.: Thirty Years' War, a religious and political war centering in Germany, 1618–48.—adj. and n. thir'ti-eth.

Syn., n. crowd, populace, mob, rabble, multitude. A crowd, whether great or few in number, is too numerous to be comfortable in the space at its disposal; crowds are usually moving about, and are packed closely together. Crowd sometimes connotes noise, agitation, and tumult, but a crowd may be hushed into a silent, respectful group. A crowd motivated by wild excitement or inflamed to some purpose becomes a mob. Those who make up a mob may ordinarily be people of sense and standing, but the rabble is always the lowest and most miserable class of people. The populace is the common people; the term is sometimes contemptuous, connoting the ignorance and vulgarity ordinarily associated with great uneducated masses. A throng is characterized by vast numbers that are densely packed together and moving, but usually not so agitated or tumultuous as a crowd. A multitude names a vast assemblage.
